Pokemon plotters talked violent intentions online

Discard pile.

Suspects talked of "bullet holes" and a "Boston Massacre," authorities said.

The two men charged Monday for threatening an attack on the Pokemon World Championships in Boston boasted about their plans online, police said.

Kevin Norton, 18, and James Stumbo, 27, both of Iowa, were held without bail pending a Sept. 1 dangerousness hearing for what authorities have called serious threats against the competition, which was attended by thousands, many of whom were children.

Police reportedly found two high-powered firearms, a pile of ammunition and a hunting knife on Friday in a vehicle the pair were driving. They were arrested in a Saugus hotel room Saturday, police said.

"Inside, there were a lot of kids," Boston Police Commissioner William Evans told reporters Monday morning. "Thank God we were able to cut off whatever these two individuals coming from Iowa were up to."

After receiving tips from convention center authorities — who first were tipped off by Pokemon leadership — stopped the pair as they tried to enter the Hynes Convention Center on Thursday, police said. Police released the two and seized their car pending a search warrant, then arrested the men on Saturday, police said.

Evans on Monday could not say whether the two were being monitored by police during the time they were released from custody. He said police believed the threat had been neutralized when officers seized the weapons, and added the men had not yet checked into the Saugus Red Roof Inn when their vehicle was impounded.

Messages online from the suspects included references to "bullet holes" and "creating another Boston Massacre," authorities said, as well as nods to the Columbine High School shootings.

"There were alarming social media posts, specifically Facebook forums, relative to threats of violence at the Pokemon World Championships," Suffolk County Assistant District Attorney Joseph Janeczic said before praising law enforcement at Monday's arraignment.

Prosecutors said that Stumbo posted a status update saying, "My AR-15 'you lose.'" Norton's Facebook page has photos of him firing guns, officials said.

Defense Attorney Steven

Goldwyn said that the charges against Stumbo all pertain to possession, which he said did not qualify as probable cause for arrest because he was not in control of the car.

"The firearms were not found on his person," Goldwyn said. "He was not in possession of the firearms or the ammo and does not own the car."

The two were said to have traveled to Boston from Iowa with a 12-gauge Remington shotgun and 244 shells, a DPMS Model AR-15 assault rifle with a high-capacity clip, a scope and 40 rounds, as well as a hunting knife in the car.

Neither men have criminal records. Norton and Stumbo stood in court wearing gym shorts and T-shirts. Norton had a camouflage hunting shirt on.

The two were arraigned on possession of unlicensed firearm charges, and have not yet faced charges for the alleged threats.

Derailed? Green Line extension price tag jumps $1B

The cost set by the Green Line extension contractor for the first three stations is more than double the amount state and federal transit officials recently estimated, calling into question the full price tag of the new trolley line and whether the state can afford to build it.

Recently estimated at about $2 billion — which doesn't include the cost of financing — the full cost of adding seven new trolley stations in East Cambridge, Somerville and Medford could wind up as much as $1 billion over budget, MBTA Interim General Manager Frank DePaola told reporters on Monday.

Officials who briefed the MBTA's Fiscal and Management Control Board on Monday afternoon are now looking to renegotiate with the contractor and alter the plans.

An early phase of building a new Lechmere Station, a spur to Union Square, and Washington Street Station in Somerville was estimated to cost $387 million this past winter when the Federal Transit Authority approved almost $1 billion in federal funding.

"Everything's on the table, and everything includes canceling the project, but that's not where we want to go, but we need a project we can afford to build," Transportation Secretary Stephanie Pollack told reporters Monday. STATE HOUSE NEWS

Hazmat. Allston suspect IDed in container mystery

One man is in custody and an unidentified substance is being tested in a lab following Sunday's hazmat scare in Allston.

Police closed down part of the neighborhood after receiving a tip about a clear plastic container bearing the words "danger napalm" on Brighton Avenue, police said Monday. A second suspicious package was later discovered nearby on Harvard Avenue, police said.

Bomb and hazardous materials investigators later deemed the area clear to reopen, police said.

Police arrested Stephen Michael Schroder, 23, at his Brighton home. Schroder, who police said was not a student, faces charges for disturbing the peace and two counts of using a hoax explosive device.

A witness reportedly told police they saw Schroder place a similar container behind 90 Harvard Avenue. Officers soon after arrested the man on prior arrest warrants,

In his home, investigators found other "suspicious substances," but the Boston Police Department hazmat team determined the substances were harmless and disposed of them, according to the report.

Boston Police Commissioner William Evans told reporters Monday that some suspicious substances related to the incident were being tested in a lab. SPENCER BUELL

Police seek suspects in Eastie machete attack

An argument ended in a machete attack in East Boston on Sunday night.

Authorities said two men approached the two victims on Chelsea Street and an argument turned violent at about 11 p.m.

One of the suspects pulled out a machete and swung it at the victim. The victim was taken to the hospital for non-life-threatening injuries.

Police on Monday were looking for two Hispanic men between the ages of 20 and 25. They were described as thin, weighing around 130 to 160 pounds, and were both about 5-foot-8. They were both wearing blue jeans, T-shirts and backpacks, police said.

There were two other men who joined the suspects in the argument. They weren't considered primary suspects, police said. NATE HOMAN

Dirty Disney is serving up musical, cartoony sleaze

Bedknobs and Broomsticks.

Comedians' X-rated improvised songs are shocking sold-out crowds in Fort Point.

Fans of "Cinderella" and "Peter Pan," shield your eyes. Or don't.

A troupe of Boston improv comedy veterans are taking the Disney tunes you know and love and morphing them into X-rated masterpieces, made up on the spot.

Dirty Disney's raunchy send-ups have so far found a gleeful audience in the city, the show's stars told Metro this week — even those who thought they knew what they were getting into.

"It's funny. They come in with an expectation that the show is going to be dirty — it is what it is. And they're still shocked every time we sing 'The Circle of Life' about a massive black dildo," said cast member Patrick Parhiala. "It's like, 'No, this is what you wanted.'"

The show works like this: audience members pick a gross or sexy prompt (venereal disease, sex positions) then a number at random that corresponds with a Disney tune. It's the cast's job to blend them together. A pianist supplies the live background music.

The results? Gems like "Got the Clap," sung to the tune "Let It Go" from "Frozen," or "We're Having Sex Tonight," sung to Randy Newman's "Toy Story" classic "You've Got a Friend in Me."

It's the brainchild of Catalyst Comedy, the performers behind the made-up songs of the Boston Unscripted Musical Project. And it's catching on. Both of Dirty Disney's once-a-month shows so far have been sold out, and the cast said tickets are selling fast for performances booked through December at the cozy Boston Button Factory venue in Fort Point.

Almost all the buzz so far has been through word of mouth, said co-founder Pablo Rojas.

He and his peers said they believe the Dirty Disney ethos is so appealing because it taps into our desire to subvert the sacred and reject the restrained.

After all, said Rojas, people have been secretly consuming adult twists on pop culture — pervy cartoons and the like — for decades.

"It's very clear the public wants this," Rojas said. "I think in general, people are good and fun-loving and they like wholesome things, but when you tell them they can only do things in one specific way, there's this reaction of, 'really? Why?'"

The show's allure can also be traced back to pre-puberty, said co-founder and resident director Misch Whitaker, an established local improv comedian who also works as a nurse and studied human development.

We all had sexual thoughts as kids, she said, and it isn't uncommon for children to have the hots for cartoons they grow up watching.

"I had a crush on ['The Little Mermaid' co-star] Prince Eric," Whitaker said. "There's a certain joy in going back to what you were attracted to in your childhood and then having fun with the idea of it."

Stay tuned. Founders said the show's success has them considering moving the show to a bigger venue in the city, or adding more performances to their calendar.

France honors Americans, Briton who disarmed train gunman

French President Francois Hollande on Monday awarded France's highest honor, the Legion d'honneur, to three U.S. citizens and a Briton who helped disarm a machine gun-toting suspected Islamist militant on a train last week.

"Faced with the evil called terrorism, there is a good — that's humanity. You are the incarnation of that," Hollande told the Spencer Stone, a 23-year-old U.S. airman traveling with two friends on the train from Amsterdam to Paris on Friday, told reporters on Sunday how he plugged the blood-spurting wound of another passenger with his fingers after he himself was wounded by the attacker.

"I just stuck two of my fingers in the hole, found what I thought to be the artery, pushed down, and the bleeding stopped," he said at a news conference alongside his friends, student Anthony Sadler, also 23, and National Guardsman Alek Skarlatos, 22.

Drone with drugs, porn seized near prisons, two arrested

Two men have been arrested for allegedly trying to fly drugs and pornography into Maryland prisons using a drone, authorities said on Monday, the second U.S. prison incident involving drones in a month.

The men were arrested late on Saturday near the Western Correctional Institution and the North Branch Correctional Institution at Cumberland in western Maryland, the state prison department said.

A spokesman said officers seized pornographic video discs, tobacco, a loaded handgun, illegal drugs and the drone.

Louisiana trooper dies after being shot in head

A Louisiana trooper died after being shot in the head by a man who told him, "You are going to die soon," Louisiana State Police said on Monday.

Senior Trooper Steven Vincent, 43, had pulled over to assist the driver of a Dodge pickup truck in a ditch on Sunday afternoon, state police said.

The driver, Kevin Daigle, who was driving recklessly earlier, then pulled out a sawed-off shotgun and fired, striking the trooper in the head. A camera in the officer's vehicle captured the shooting on videotape, authorities said. REUTERS

FTC has authority to police cybersecurity

A U.S. appeals court said the Federal Trade Commission has authority to regulate corporate cybersecurity and may pursue a lawsuit accusing Wyndham hotels of failing to safeguard consumers' information.

Monday's decision by the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia upheld an April 2014 lower court ruling allowing the case to go forward.

It arose from breaches in 2008 and 2009 in which hackers broke into Wyndham's computer system and stole credit card information from more than 619,000 consumers, leading to $10.6 million in fraudulent charges.

Apple to replace some iPhone 6 Plus cameras over blurry photos

Apple said it would replace a limited number of iPhone 6 Plus phone cameras due to faulty back cameras that take blurry photos.

The affected phones were mostly sold in a four-month period between September 2014 and January 2015.

The company said a small component in the affected 6 Pluses' iSight back camera may fail.

Apple said it would replace the phones' cameras free of charge if they take blurry photos and fall into a particular serial number range. REUTERS

Movie gunman. Holmes is 'monster' and is destined for 'hell,' victim says

The Colorado movie massacre gunman is destined for the "darkest, most painful part of hell," a sobbing victim testified on Monday at the start of a three-day hearing after which James Holmes will be formally sentenced to life with no parole.

"I will never forgive the monster that sits in this courtroom, smiling and laughing with his defense attorneys when the jury and your honor are out of the room," said Anita Busch, whose second cousin, Micayla Medek, was among the 12 people Holmes killed.

She said there were no words to explain the agony and despair that Holmes had put their families through.

"[He] will reside in the deepest, darkest, most painful part of hell."

The 27-year-old was found guilty last month of murdering 12 people and wounding 70 during his July 2012 rampage at a packed midnight screening of a Batman film in the Denver suburb of Aurora.

This is the business school of the future

Education.

Interdisciplinary programs combine engineering, design and entrepreneurship for more innovative solutions.

In today's marketplace, specializing in one field is no longer enough. Instead, those who are looking to start their own company, invent something revolutionary or just improve the mechanics of a certain product need to have a handle on multiple areas.

Business schools are finally responding to this need. The Darden School of Business at the University of Virginia has just launched a new Innovation, Design and Entrepreneurship in Action course for MBAs. And Carnegie Mellon University's Integrated Innovation Institute, created in 2014 and offered at both the Pittsburgh and Silicon Valley campuses (with a possible Brooklyn location TBA), is the first business-oriented graduate program in the U.S. to cross-train its students in engineering, product design and entrepreneurship.

"Engineering, design and business make a product performance-ready, desirable and economically viable," says Peter Boatwright, co-director of the Integrated Innovation Institute and professor at the Tepper School of Business. "When you think about innovation, it's got to be multidisciplinary if it's going to work."

Boatwright tells us why it's important for both MBAs and techies to branch out and diversify.

It marries creating with making money

Who hasn't worked in a place where innovators and creators have clashed with the money-makers and purse string-holders? By teaching engineers how to run a business or MBAs the basics of product design, you're not only creating an understanding between these groups, you're leading the way to more innovative, more affordable and more life-changing products.

"The integration of these skills takes away the 'them' and 'us' and pulls it together into a collective 'us,'" says Boatwright. "Think of it as a step up from collaboration."

Students get hands-on experience

As part of Carnegie Mellon's Integrated Product Development course, students work in teams to recognize and conceptualize new product opportunities in the marketplace — often for corporate partners.

For spring 2015, for

One more thing

The Institute also allows companies such as Navistar and Ford to send employees to brush up on innovation skills like market research and writing business plans. "They come to learn our process, not just learn about it," Boatwright says.

Students need to have expertise in more than one area to succeed in the business world. ISTOCK example, Volvo Construction Equipment sponsored a student group working to advance construction site safety. The result: SiteAware, which uses a laser radar, or LIDAR, system and cameras to help employees better navigate their surroundings and avoid injuring others and themselves while operating machinery.

"Some of the companies see in the news what Carnegie Mellon is capable of doing, and they come to us," Boatwright says. "Volvo, after the fact, said [SiteAware] was superb. They didn't expect, in the world of safety, for a team of students to do something safer than what they had thought of."

It will boost your job marketability

Boatwright, along with co-directors Jonathan Cagan and Eric Anderson, created the Institute at a time when major companies felt the need to improve their approach to innovation.

So far, it seems to be true: Microsoft, MakerBot Industries and Nissan are only a few companies to already hire graduates of the program.

"There's a need to understand how to create value and do a better job," says Boatwright.

STEM. The real reason why there are more women studying science

When unemployment is high, more women turn to the lucrative STEM fields. ISTOCK

Encouraging more women to pursue careers in science, technology, education and math — the so-called STEM fields — is a worthy goal, given the potential payoff for our economy and for women who get jobs in these higher-paying fields.

One surprising way to make it happen: Suffer through a recession.

New research has found that increased unemployment leads both genders to move toward fields associated with better earnings and job prospects, and that women are more likely to shift their majors in that direction than men.

The switch to more math-intensive majors contradicts the stereotype that women are less capable of success in STEM fields, according to a paper published by Institute for the Study of Labor, a German research center.

No one knows why women seem to be more sensitive to economic conditions than men, although previous research has shown women's decisions to work and invest in higher education are more closely associated with economic conditions than are men's labor market decisions.

The study used the Ameri-

The study was not trying to show that business and STEM majors are "better" than liberal arts ones. Nor was it gauging which fields make people happier or which careers are best for society.

But it did find that increased income from switching to better-paying majors helped offset some of the lifetime loss of income that happens when people graduate in a recession. The offset made recessions "10 percent less painful" for graduates.

How One Direction will spend their breakup time

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

While fans are still reeling from the news that One Direction is reportedly splitting up next year to focus on solo projects, I've already moved on to prognosticating how they'll be enjoying their newfound freedom. (Yes, the obvious answer is "doing whatever Simon Cowell tells them to do," but still.) So, after this tour wraps up in October and their new album comes out in February, what will the boys eventually be doing with themselves? Funny you should ask.

Harry Styles: Freed from his boy band shackles, the de facto frontman will likely abandon music altogether in pursuit of cheeky film and TV cameos and, I dunno, opening a salon or something.

Liam Payne: The "serious"

one will probably put out a collection of his take on Frank Sinatra's oeuvre. It'll be as terrible as it sounds.

Liam Tomlinson: He'll have that baby with that woman he totally got pregnant, then maybe schedule some male bonding time with Styles.

Niall Horan: Who? Oh right, the Irish one. Riverdance. Definitely Riverdance.

Drake and Serena, in Cincinnati, K-I-S-S-I-N-G

Thanks to some super-grainy cellphone pictures posted to TMZ, we have pretty solid confirmation that there's truth to the rumors about Drake and Serena Williams being an item that have been floating around all summer. The pair dined at a swanky Cincinnati restaurant — apparently Cincinnati has fancy restaurants, who knew? — and were spotted looking extra cozy and lip-locked. Earlier that same day, Williams won the local WTA tournament with Drake doing his new regular thing: watching her play from the stands. Hey, it beats fending off Meek Mill jabs, right?

Missy Elliott joining 'The Voice'

"The Voice" keeps getting more crowded, as now Missy Elliott has signed on to serve as an adviser for Pharrell Williams' team when the show returns Sept. 21, according to E! News. Previous advisers for Williams' team have included Lionel Richie and Alicia Keys, so it will be interesting to see what advice someone who is not necessarily a singer has for the contestants. For the ninth season, Elliott joins ranks that already include Selena Gomez for Gwen Stefani's team and Brad Paisley for Blake Shelton's. Adam Levine, on the other hand, is going with ... John Fogerty? Sure, I guess. And, as NBC previously announced, Rihanna will be advising all contestants, regardless of spinny-chair judge affiliation.

Interview. The actress may not like the “Sinister 2” genre, but she still wants you to go see it.

In “Sinister 2,” Shannyn Sossamon plays a mom trying to protect her twin sons from an abusive dad from whom she’s run away ... and also an evil spirit named Bughuul who, unbeknownst to her, has its sights on her sons. As it turns out, Sossamon, a mother of two, can’t relate to either staying with a bad husband or the horror genre, despite occasionally working in it. But it was the drama aspect that appealed to her anyway, feeding into her belief that true horror and dysfunction starts at home.

I heard you aren’t a fan of horror movies.

It’s true. Yes, I am not, and I don’t see them in the theater, and I don’t stop on them when I’m watching television, which I don’t watch much of. But I do think you should see “Sinister 2” in a theater! [Laughs]

Is it that you freak out when watching them?

I just get scared too easily. I’m a drama queen about it. I don’t want to put my nervous system through that. But I do love a good psychological thriller. I did go see “The Babadook,” which people had been telling me I had to see. And I did enjoy it. It was scary, but there were parts that were really amazing.

Regardless of how you feel about the genre, in “Sinister 2” you’re not really involved in the horror business until the end. For most of it, you’re a mother trying to protect her kids from an abusive father.

She’s unaware of it until the end, so I had to focus on that. I remember speaking with the director [Ciaran Foy] before the shoot started, and that’s what he wanted: “This is a family story, and I wanted it to be just as important as the horror.” What I also thought was really beautiful is that he wanted to show the link between the ghoulish and dysfunctional parenting — how the chain of evil starts in the home, in the way we raise our children.

How much did you draw on your own experiences as a mother?

It was my ticket in, as far as stakes go. She’s trying to protect her kids, trying to make a better life for them. But there were other things I had to work on that I couldn’t quite relate to.

Did you do research into victims of spousal abuse?

That was a huge question. I had to figure out why she stayed with him for so long, because I can’t relate. I did find little links. It really is hard for women to see that it’s unhealthy. They don’t know it because the love is so

In “Sinister 2,” out now, Shannyn Sossamon plays a mother trying to protect her boys from an abusive dad — and, eventually, an evil ghost. / FOCUS FEATURES

One more thing

Then and now

You’ve spoken about how when you were first in movies, as an unknown in “A Knight’s Tale,” you had to struggle to learn the craft on the job, in front of everyone. Do you feel more comfortable with acting these days?

I have fallen in love with being an actor, for sure. It was little by little over the years. It grows and grows. To be really good at anything, you need a fierce, passionate desire. I’m glad I’m finally there. It’s a lot more fun now. It just took me some time.

strong at first. I think when you fall in love with people, at first they can do really crazy things. You can go blind because of the original feeling you had for them. [The abuse] wasn’t happening at first. It just started to happen later. And then it got a little worse and a little worse. I was able to figure out why she was with him for so long.

Harness the power of your stress

Stanford prof Kelly McGonigal on making anxiety your back-to-school superpower.

EVA KIS
eva.kis@metu.us

Kelly McGonigal may be the most excited about back-to-school season.

"I wish all stress were as good as back-to-school stress," the Stanford University professor tells us. "There is some obvious meaning attached to it; it's a perfect opportunity to take a growth mindset because the entire point of one's education is to grow and to learn. All the way from childhood, there's that sense of possibility when a new school year begins."

As a health psychologist and lecturer, she sees stress every day on the pressure cooker that is her campus and spent years telling people how to manage it. But research led her to realize there is a serious mind-over-matter effect when people learned to see their anxiety as an asset, which led to her new book, "The Upside of Stress."

If her description of the beginning of the school year took you back to a time, there's a reason. The technical term for McGonigal's tactics in the book is quick-intervention mindset shifts — "really great things we can remind ourselves of that I think are much more intuitive when we're younger," she explains.

The objective: Give your stress meaning. In trying to ditch the negative connotation of the word, McGonigal devised a different definition: "Stress is what arises when something you care about is at stake."

Keep that in mind and follow her tips to step confidently into the new school year.

Draw a mental map

Outlining your goals gives everything — the long lectures, the missed parties, the tough tests — purpose. Think about what you want to offer the world, how you think the world should be different, the change that you want to see, what you would like to do to contribute to that change, and think about how your education is enabling you to be that kind of person and make that kind of contribution. "That makes everything from math problems less boring and more interesting to making it easier to persevere when you experience academic setbacks," she says.

Set stress goals

Instead of trying to control things you can't — traffic, illness — give yourself stress goals like running a half-marathon or taking a higher-level course. Rather than taxing your resources, this is what will build them up. "I'm always looking for a new course to teach, a new school to teach [at] — but it's a good reach. I'm always encouraging my students of all ages to think about how they want to develop and what would be a challenging experience that will cause them stress and [to] grow."

Reclaim your energy

You don't have to take 20 deep breaths or control your anxiety to succeed. See your anxiety before an exam as a resource, rather than a sign that you're gonna blow it, says McGonigal. "You come to understand that your pounding heart means that your body is getting ready to help you rise to the challenge — it means your brain is getting more energy. Kids and adults who release more adrenaline before an exam tend to score higher.

"One of the biggest mistakes people make is to think the goal is to never experience stress so they teach a lot of strategies for squashing it, like deep breathing. There's nothing wrong with deep breathing, but you don't need to be calm all the time in order to achieve or succeed; you can view that same stress as motivation and ask yourself, 'How do I want to use that energy?'"

Embrace biology

Use your homesickness as motivation to build new roots, connect with people and try new things — it's what it's there for. "We have that experience — the emptiness, the loneliness or feeling overwhelmed — to push us to engage with the world. The biology of loneliness is to increase the hormone in your body that makes you want to be around people," she explains. Those hormones also make it easier to connect, which is why you tend to develop intense bonds during freshman year. "The worst thing you can do is wait for it to go away."

Fear becomes confidence

"People often feel like they don't belong and are often uncertain about their ability to reach their goals. It's exceptionally rare not to have that experience, and it doesn't mean that you're unable to reach your goals," McGonigal says. "That can actually be a positive source of motivation — as you persist, as you survive, that sense of wondering 'Can I do this? Am I right here? Are people looking at me and expecting me to fail?' changes over time."

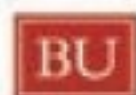

Enjoy your weekend.

Brady far from Mr. September

NFL. If Tom Brady is allowed to play this September, he likely won't light it up.

Tom Brady likely loathes the month of September, and not just because that was the month in which he once had his knee smashed to smithereens by Bernard Pollard. The fact is, Brady typically gets off to slow starts during the course of a regular season. And in recent years, No. 12 has looked more like Joe Flacco than Joe Montana in the season's first month.

With things still up in the air as far as Brady's Deflategate suspension goes, it remains to be seen if he will play in September of 2015. But regardless of whenever he begins play this season, do not expect him to be in February form from the jump.

There was plenty of attention regarding Brady's poor play in September of last year.

Long hair or short hair, the month of September has not been kind to Tom Brady. / GETTY IMAGES

He averaged 20.2 completions on 34.2 attempts in the first four games of 2014 and threw for an average of just 197.7 yards. He only threw four touchdown passes total and was picked off twice. The Pats went 2-2 in the stretch, bottoming out on the Monday night from hell in Kansas City.

What has been overlooked, however, is that Brady has sputtered out of the gate for a while now. In September of 2013, the Pats went 4-0 but Brady was the definition of mediocre. He threw for over 300 yards just once and had a passer rating of over 100.0 just once.

In September of 2012, the individual numbers were there as he had a passer rating of over 100.0 in three out of four games. But the Pats lost to the Cardinals at home in Week 2, and the Ravens in Baltimore on a Sunday night the following week. By Week 4 of that season, Brady figured things out as the Pats walloped the Bills, 52-28, in Buffalo with Brady throwing three touchdown passes and zero picks.

In 2010 and 2011, Brady had two respective September clunkers. In Week 3 of 2011, he threw four picks at Buffalo in a 34-31 Pats loss. In 2010, Rex Ryan's Jets made Brady look mortal as he threw two picks and had a passer rating of just 72.5 in a 28-14 loss in the Meadowlands.

As for the here and now, reading into preseason games is a fruitless undertaking. But those who were hoping to see Brady take out some Deflategate anger on the Packers and Saints in the past few weeks were surely disappointed. This August, Brady is 3 for 9 for 23 yards with zero touchdowns and zero interceptions.

Jimmy Garoppolo, meanwhile, has been solid this August. His combined numbers read: 48-of-63 for 428 yards, one touchdown, two picks and an average rating of 85.9.

Brady missing any regular season time is a nightmarish situation for the Pats. But if games are to be missed, September really isn't the worst time for it.

The old guard

The Patriots made it official Monday, signing wide receiver Reggie Wayne to a one-year deal.

- "He's certainly had a great career and has done a lot of things for the Colts organization, primarily playing on the left but then in more recent years being moved around to playing on the right and also in some slot situations," Patriots head coach Bill Belichick said of Wayne on WEEI.
- Another age-challenged receiver, Randy Moss, made some headlines this past weekend, hinting that he'd like to return to the NFL. "I have been retired for the last two years, but you never know. It's the love of the game that I still have inside me," Moss said on Fox.
